In answer to questions, he stated that the water of Tanganyika was perfectly sweet. The President thought it unlikely that a closed basin existed in that humid part of Africa, where the evaporations from a lake would not equal the amount of water poured into it.--Mr. A. G. Findlay would not admit that the information we had received regarding altitudes was final, and believed it still possible that the Lualaba was connected with Albert Nyanza. These views of Beke and Petherick, the wellknown German geographer, Dr. Petermann, has made more pronounced by a long and closely critical paper in his Mittheilungen, in which he gives most forcible reasons for declaring that Livingstone s Lualaba and coexistent lakes and tributaries are the head-waters of the Congo, and have no possible connection with the Nile. The Congo alone has the capacity to receive the vast volume of water which the new sources pour out. The Lualaba, he assumes, carries down nineteen times more water than the Bahr el Ghazal (with which river Livingstone would fain identify it), and at the least three times as much as the White Nile. And as to any connection with the great rivers of the East Coast, the Shari and the Benue, not only is their capacity too small to receive the Lualaba s store, but the opposite seasons of their respective flooding prove that there can be no relations between them and the newlydeveloped water-basin of...
