Beware of the narrow and cocksure Procrustean of every walk of life, who would have all institutions shaped to fit their own pet ideals, regardless of the need of the world of widely different products. The habit of concentration as distinguished from action is invaluable as a preparation for some technical work, but for some other technical work that habit would be an injury, to be avoided as far as compatible with getting the needed knowledge. One man's meat is another man's poison. He who likes that meat should not ram it down the throat of those whom it poisons. It would be hard to overvalue the plan which Mr. McLeod has disclosed. Professor Crabtree is right, I believe, in holding that technical teachers are moving in the direction of becoming educators, and laying more stress on giving a broad foundation of general principles and less on specialization. THE STORM WILL BE WEATHERED. CHARLES M. SOILWAB, Chairman, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, New York. My pride has been hurt a little this evening, because as I came in one of my reportorial friends said to me, Mr. Schwab, are you going to make an address, and if so have you prepared it? I said, My friend, I never prepare an address. Well, he said, I have read some of your speeches, and I quite agree with you. (Laughter.) Soberly, gentlemen, when I think of this great industry, its sturdy character,...
